THE ESSENCY OF ECONOMY. I noted in the buying of some photo-graphs that the clerk who made up the package had some of this string. It is the same that our grocers use. The clerk first measured the parcel this way and that, and took just enough to make the knot and no more. Still, string is cheaper here than with us. I mention this as an example of the economy of the people.

And still you will find but few rich Japanese! The rule here is that the people are not accumulative, in our sense of the word. They have never learned the philosophy of investment, and they spend all they make. They have in the past had no chance for the investment of money, except in lands, and the saving done has been largely for rebuilding their houses in case of fires, which are very frequent. Dr. Hepburn, who has been in Japan for more than ten years, is my authority for the statement that a Japanese house is thought on the average to last only five years before it is destroyed by fire. The framework and the interiors are like tinder, and whole villages are swallowed up almost monthly in Japanese conflagrations.

The people are the most careless in regard to fires I have ever seen, and there are no fire departments to speak of out of the four or five large cities. This danger has thus been an incentive to saving, but above this there is little. Seventenths of the people, at a rough estimate, live from hand to mouth, though the postal savings banks, which have been introduced, bid fair to teach them differently. Interest is high, and the banks make money. There is not a large gov-ernment debt, and most of the debt is held at home.—Frank G. Carpenter.

How Barber Shops Are Managed. The proprietor of a barber shop pays the rent, puts in the furniture and fixtures, combs, brushes, pomades and other utensils. The man at the chair furnishes his own razors and topics for conversation. Owing to the custom of assigning the employes oldest in the service and presumably the best men to the front chairs a graded wage is paid. The chairs nearest the door and consequently the most accessible are the most lucrative. The transient customer usually takes the first chair within reach. The new barber is given the chair at the foot of the line. He may be the most competent artist in the place, but he has to begin at the bottom and work his way forward as the barbers in front of him quit their employment. This arrangement has one of the virtues of civil service regulations. The foreman is the oldest employe and works in the chair next that of the proprietor, who has the
